ProQuest Open Access Publishing PLUS and the Institutional Repository

Many questions about difference between what PQ offers and what universities offer:

- Bottom Line: ProQuest' OA Publishing PLUS is very different than what is offered by universities
 - Free access via ProQuest Dissertations and Theses database (PQDT)
 - Inclusion in "PQDT Open"
- Most authors will want to chose whether to participate in ProQuest Traditional Publishing or ProQuest Open Access Publishing PLUS

Novice teacher retention: A study of a model program

by Wood, Donald K., Ed.D., ARIZONA STATE UNIVERSITY, 2008, 123 pages; 3339544

Abstract:

This quantitative study examined perceptions of Rodel Exemplary Teachers and Rodel Graduates regarding issues of retention and satisfaction as they relate to the Rodel teacher initiative. Data were collected through a Likert type survey of Rodel teacher initiative participants and were then analyzed for statistical significance by utilizing descriptive statistics, tests of significance, and correlation analysis. The goal was to determine the impact of the Rodel teacher initiative on teacher retention and satisfaction within high-poverty schools throughout Arizona. An extensive review of the literature appropriate to teacher retention and satisfaction throughout the last 150 years was conducted and focused on women's issues in education, contemporary issues in teacher retention, mentoring programs, and the Rodel Foundation's efforts.

Results supported the view that mentoring programs have the ability to be successful in helping retain teachers and increase their satisfaction in high-poverty schools. Perceptions of those within the Rodel teacher initiative were paramount in drawing this conclusion, and were subjected to statistical analysis through t -tests, descriptive statistics, and correlation analysis. The results suggest areas of further research due to the depth and breadth of retention and satisfaction issues within education, as well as the ongoing nature of the Rodel teacher initiative. Further study may contribute to the expansion of the Rodel teacher initiative to a broader base or State sponsored initiative.

About Google / Google Scholar / Google Books

Now, dissertations and theses are more discoverable than ever. ProQuest has arranged with Google, Google Scholar and Google Books to allow indexing and searching across bibliographic data for graduate works published in 2007 and forward. Searches will retrieve basic metadata for each graduate work (title, author, abstract, keywords, etc), and provide links to ProQuest for purchase or access. Searches will also retrieve a preview of the graduate work's full text in Google Books.

These new dissemination avenues broaden author exposure beyond the traditional research community. Most scholars benefit from increased exposure to their published work, so the ubiquity of Google and Google Scholar should benefit most graduate students.

What graduate works are indexed and searched by Google?

Right now, Google, Google Scholar and Google Books are indexing dissertations and theses published since 2007. However, Canadian graduate works published prior to 2011 are not included, nor are any that are embargoed or restricted at an author's request. In 2007, we started adding dissertations and theses, unless the author indicated we should not in the publishing agreement.

What about Open Access and free institutional access?

Our efforts through Google, Google Scholar and Google Books are about expanding the availability of dissertations and theses beyond the scholarly community. Obviously, this is not intended to substitute for the kinds of liberal and/or free access that researchers normally have to dissertations and theses through institutional subscriptions to the ProQuest Dissertations & Theses \(PQDT\) database.

And of course, dissertations and theses published under our Open Access Publishing Plus option will be available for immediate, full-text download from ProQuest's PQDT Open web site, and the bibliographic data will also be searchable via Google, Google Scholar and Google Books.

What if a graduate author doesn't want their work to be made available through Google?

ProQuest allows several ways to restrict access, in whole or in part. Graduate authors who prefer not to see their work discoverable via Google can direct our Author and School Relations staff to place a restriction on their graduate work. We can also arrange to restrict listing in Google and other 3rd parties but allow distribution to the academic community through our traditional, direct channels.

Graduate authors who have reasons to more fully restrict the distribution of their work should work with their graduate school and the ProQuest/UMI Dissertation Publishing group at the time of submission to arrange embargo or restriction.

I have more questions about dissertations and theses in Google.

Please contact us at scholarlypublishing@proquest.com. We'll be happy to answer any questions you might have.
